

DESIGN PHILOSOPHY

Towers|Golde does not have a 'style'. Our designs are specific to the client, the site, and the larger physical and cultural context, whether that is ecological, architectural, historical or institutional. By carefully interweaving environmental character and architectural aesthetic, we unite site and structure with apparent effortlessness to create memorable spaces of distinctive character that enrich the daily lives of individuals and their communities.

Our practice is founded on skillful analysis of landscape conditions, sensitivity to architectural mission and issues of scale, commitment to the principles of sustainable design, and unusual respect for client concerns. We are dedicated to an inclusive, collaborative design process that serves art and stewardship as well as budget and function.

In the belief that variety fosters creativity, the firm maintains a portfolio that is diverse in project size, type and geographic distribution. This approach assures that we bring a fresh eye for scale, detail and landscape opportunity to each commission. It has also allowed us to develop an unusual depth of experience in a significant number of specialties. Our projects have ranged from university campus plans to historic garden restorations, from corporate headquarters to large urban developments, and from private residences to a new city in South Korea.
