

STUDIO CULTURE

Towers|Golde is organized as an open design studio, both physically and philosophically. We are an office of diverse ages, genders, and ethnicities; we are housed in the newly remodeled loft space of a 19th century industrial building; our design process is inclusive. Additionally, we believe that landscape designers should be responsible for all phases of the design process, from conceptual design through actual implementation.

This project management process not only provides our clients with continuity of personal service throughout a project, it also assures them the highest quality of project design: design decisions are made with full understanding of their construction and budget implications, and field decisions are made with full understanding of the design intent. It also promotes the greatest professional fulfillment and personal commitment of our design staff. Average office tenure is over 10 years and ranges up to over 35 years, providing us extraordinary depth of project experience.

We are located near vibrant downtown New Haven and the culturally rich Yale University campus. We are also within easy commute to New York and Boston, to both service our clients and enhance our weekends.
